Denmark: Prime Minister Krag's minority Social Democratic government is threatened by a rift within the left-wing Socialist People's Party upon which it depends for support. The trouble, brewing for some time, flared into the open in connection with Krag's move to freeze an anticipated wage hike. The prime minister also faces problems with the right wing in his own party which is restive over Krag's cooperation with the Socialist left. The right wing is reported to believe that Krag's days are numbered, and that new elections will be called, resulting in further Social Democratic losses and the discrediting of Krag.
